ABOUT THE SIR ZELMAN COWEN SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The Sir Zelman Cowen School of Music has produced national and international soloists, ensemble performers, composers and music researchers for fifty years. We excel in classical as well as jazz and popular music performance. Our ethnomusicology and musicology programs are world renowned and we have vibrant programs in composition and creative music technology.

How you can study music at Monash?

There are a number of ways you can include music in your studies at Monash.

If you are considering a career in the music industry then you would audition to enrol in the Bachelor of Music specialist course.

For detailed information on the Bachelor of Music course go: http://www.monash.edu.au/pubs/handbooks/courses/0821.html

Within the Bachelor of Arts course

You can include music as a major, a minor or as electives within your Bachelor of Arts. There is an opportunity to join a range of small and large ensembles, some of which require an audition, and you can take overseas study units.

Examples of units you can study in your Bachelor of Arts course are:

First year units
- Popular music in global perspective
- Music and history
- Music and culture

Second year units
- Music ensemble
- The ethnomusicology of improvisation
- Recording and computer music production

Third year units
- Music in Australia
- The music business: how to succeed in the music industry
- Music research in the digital age

Within another Monash course

Many other Monash courses have up to eight free electives that can be taken as music elective units.

For more information:
future.arts.monash.edu/ug-music/